

Rank Stocks (rankstocks.com)

Idea:

The idea of the website is to ask users what they think of listed stocks and rank the stocks based on user rankings. The aim of the website is to help investors validate their ideas towards a certain stock by looking at what others think of the website. If an investor thinks highly of a stock but everyone else believes otherwise, they will have to be more careful with their investments.

Features:

- The website will list all stocks listed on Nasdaq.
- It will let users express their ideas about any stocks they prefer.
- It will ask for the user's prediction on different criteria on how the stock will perform. Will ask the user for:
  - The price target for a month, 6 months, and a year from now.
  - If they own the stock and how much (will be private for the user)
  - Prediction for the stock's upcoming EPS
  - Rank growth
  - Rank profitability
  - Rank valuation (overvalued or undervalued?)
  - And much more

To validate if the investor is a legitimate investor, their prediction will be compared with the real outcome to see how accurate their predictions were. This will allow the website to rank the investors based on their performance. Thus, investors with higher credibility will be ranked higher and their opinion will matter more.

The website will list the investors with the highest credibility and those who are consistently wrong will lose the ability to rank any stock after a certain point. (for example, if the investors are ranked from 1-10, those whose ranking falls below 2 will no longer have the ability to share their prediction and those with a 10 will be valued the most.)

After asking those of friend of mine who regularly invest in the stock market, I came to the conclusion that the current websites (listed below) only use well-known analysts who in most cases are not trustworthy since their opinion is highly influenced by their personal benefits and whoever pays them the most for a recommendation.

People are interested to know what other discretionary investors think which is much less manipulated.
